Three Soviet plays

Nikolaï Pogodin 1900-1962; Alexander Korneichuk (1905-1972); Alexei Arbuzov (1908-1986)

Russian drama -- Translations into English; Nikolai Pogodin's plays were recognized in Soviet theatre for their realistic portrayals of common life combined with socialist and communist themes. He was known widely as the author of a trilogy about Lenin, and was the first to use Lenin as a character in any theatrical work. The chimes of the Kremlin (1940), the second in the Lenin trilogy, features a scene in which Lenin talks with an old Jewish watchmaker engaged in repairing the Kremlin chimes; Alexander Korniyuchuk was a five-time Stalin Prize laureate (1941, 1942, 1943, 1949, 1951) and a major proponent of Socialist Realism in Soviet drama. The central character of his Platon Krechet (1934) represents the 'new Soviet intelligentsia', driven by 'humanism and justice-seeking'; Alexei Arbuzov's An Irkutsk Story (1960) describes how the shallow and hedonistic life of 25-year-old Valya is transformed by the love of Sergei, foreman of an excavator crew building a dam in Siberia. Following the death of Sergei in a drowning accident, she finds new meaning in joining the construction crew and raising her children.
